ONE OF THE GREAT DELIGHTS OF SERVING on the Biodiversity Project Board of Directors is watching the creative frenzy that accompanies good ideas actually crystallize into projects. That happened this year when the McKnight Foundation stepped up with resources to facilitate the Mississippi River Network. The two-year grant enables Project staff to move ahead with plans to help some 35 organizations along the River coalesce into a lattice of policy makers, concerned citizens and experts in the 10 states lining the River, all in service to preserving this magnificent body of water that courses down the middle of our country.

Projects like this add to the energy already in place at Biodiversity Project, thanks to its new director, Jennifer Browning, new staff members and new offices in Chicago. We encourage you to read this annual report and appreciate the possibilities.
